HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT.
HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.
THIS Medicine is universally admitted
to be the most efficacious remedy known to the world. No preparation is so suited to the climates of India and China
as this fine and invigorating medicine. It is particularly adapted to the constitution of European ladies, as it is never failing in its effects in all diseases peculiar to females,
while those who are attenuated by the debilitating effects of the above climates will find in this wonderful remedy a kind of taliaman whereby they may insure a restoration to robust health.

GOLLOVAY'S OINTMENT.
The science of Medicine has never before produced any remedy that can be compared to this wonderful Ointment, as it cures
after all other means have failed, all wounds, sores, ulcers, and also the most inveterate skin diseases peculiar to the climates of India and China. It is the true friend of the Soldier and Civilian, as certain old sores can be relieved by it that cannot be conquered by any other treatment.

CURIOSITIES OF CRIMINAL LAW.

"Let us now turn from the persecutions and see what state of matters existed under the ordinary legal forms of Great Britain. According to Philander, the penalty of death was affixed to more than six hundred different crimes up till the year 1810. This gives us a dreadful view of the case. After deducting the crime of murder from the list, we have no less a margin left than five hundred and ninety-nine crimes which the penalty was death for. To say the least of it, all the parties executed under these five hundred and ninety-nine crimes were murdered in the name of law. It would not be easy now to ascertain the exact number of those who were sacrificed under these bloody statutes; but the amount of them must have been enormous. As Mr. Talbot says, 'So frequently was the full sentence executed, that throughout the "good old days" of George II., London fully deserved the name given to it by a popular writer—"The City of the Gibbet," and there was at least some reason for the poetic taunt of Dr Johnson—

"Scarce can our fields, such crowds at Tyburn die."

With hemp the gallows and the fleet supply."

"On one circuit," says Mr. O'Connell, "there were one hundred individuals tried before one judge, and ninety-seven of them hanged." We hanged, remarks Mr. Phillips, "for everything—for a shilling—for five shillings—for forty shillings—for five pounds! We hanged for a sheep—for a horse—for cattle—for nothing—for everything—even for witchcraft, for things that were, and things that could not be. Coke's 'curst tree of the gallows' was planted, and prospered in every county throughout the land; and 'Christian men and women' swung on it, 'thick as the leaves in Vallambrosa.' Will it be believed, that according to Lord Chancellor Brougham, main executions for felony alone, in Henry VI.'s time, took place in England, in one year, than in all France in seven! That in the reign of the eighth Henry, seventy-two thousand robbers suffered death—a speaking proof how feeble was the effect of the punishment of the crime! That, according to Sir Matthew Hale, thirteen persons were executed after one Assize at which he was present, convicted of having associated with gipsies for above a month! That, on the authority of Sir S. Jansen's tables, in twenty-two years, one hundred and nine persons were executed for shoplifting and other analogous offences! That within our own recollection, one hundred and sixteen executions were perpetrated, within four years, for felony alone! At the time when press warrants were issued on the alarm about the Falkland Islands, Mary Jones' husband was pressed, their goods were seized for some debt of his, and she, with two small children, was turned into the streets a-begging. She was nineteen years of age. She took some coarse linen from the counter in a shop, and slipped it under her cloak. The shopman saw her, and she laid it down. For this she was hanged. The parish officers testified that she had no bed to lie on; nothing to give her children to eat, and they were almost naked. This did not save her. The child was sucking at her breast when she set out for Tyburn gallows. . . . If a case ever could have converted the merciless into mercy," continues Mr. Phillips, "it was the case of Mary Jones. She was not the criminal, or, if she was a criminal, the authorities made her one; they took her bread from her—they forced him who earned it from his happy home, to fight their battles—perhaps to lose his life in them; she had no bed to lie on; she had no bread for her little ones; and because natural maternal kindness could not combat the temptation of the moment, they took her life, and that while she was herself, in law, an infant."

"But, say the anti-abolitionists, these times are over, such a tragedy could not be enacted now"; no gratitude to them for it; they did, in every case, as they were doing still; they clung fast to their usurpation, and held it while they could, with the desperate tenacity of a drowning grasp. . . . Let it not be forgotten that an Archbishop and six Bishops voted against the repeal of this Act. That a Chief Justice denounced the attempt as an innovation, and that "Gibbet," Lord Chancellor, exclaimed, "There was no knowing where this was to stop, and that the public ought to know, once for all, in what the criminal code consisted, that their lordships might not, from time to time, and from year to year, have their feelings distressed by discussions like the present!" and that this fierce struggle actually continued from poor Mary Jones' case in 1777, down to the year 1819."

"Two men were convicted, about the year 1849, for shooting the Duke of Cleveland's gamekeeper. As there was only one shot, a difficulty arose about the execution of the men, and the proper authorities were applied to. It was manifest they could not both have fired the one shot, and therefore were not both equally guilty. As there were no means of properly distinguishing between them, it would naturally be supposed, that both would be saved. This, however, did not occur. One was reprieved, and the other left for execution; but it so happened, as stated in the newspapers at the time, that the man who was hanged, and the man who was reprieved, agreed in stating that the lot had fallen on the wrong person. Can the jury which placed this man in the rope ever plead innocence?"

"The Proceedings for 1828-29 contains an account of the conviction and execution of the cook of a Charleston schooner for poisoning a number of the passengers. This man, who was convicted on the evidence of one of the passengers, called Tardy, declared his innocence with his last breath; and his declaration was afterwards, when too late, proved to be true. Tardy's action was the real culprit in this as well as in many other instances. He was a notorious thief and murderer, and ultimately suffered for his crimes; but that did not restore to the innocent cook who fell a victim to the law of capital punishment."

"In August 1860, William Harrison, steward to Lady Campbell, of Gloucestershire, left his home to collect his rents. He happened to reside in the neighbourhood of a family of the name of Perry, a mother and two sons—John, John, and Richard, of whom John, the mother, was a reputed witch, and John, one of the sons, was known to be half-witted. Days and weeks elapsed, and yet Harrison returned not; nor were any tidings heard of him. Rumours were rife that he had been robbed and murdered. The numerous inventions ensued, and the numerous inventions which were circulated, are supposed to have bewildered what little intellect the poor idiot had; for he actually went before a Justice and deposed to the murder of Harrison by his brother Richard, while his mother and he looked on, and afterwards joined in robbing the deceased of $140. The whole three were sent to prison, and were doubly indicted for the robbery and murder. The presiding judge refused to try them on the murder indictment, as the body had not been found; they were arraigned, however, on the charge of robbery, and pleaded guilty on some vague supposition that their lives would be spared. When the next Assizes came, Sir Robert Hyde, considering the length of time which elapsed, and the non-appearance of Harrison, tried them for the murder. The deposition of John, and the plea on the indictment for the robbery, were given in evidence, and the whole three were forthwith convicted. On the trial John retracted his accusation, declaring that he was mad when he made it, and knew not what he said. They all suffered death, loudly protesting their innocence. This poor, ignorant, deluded family had for three full years lain in a morose grave, when—let the murdered Harrison rest in peace in Gloucester—Legal Recollections quoted by Philips—

"From the grave of the Perrys, says Mr. Phillips, 'a monstrous voice should have arisen, repelling for ever capital punishment in England. We have heard it said, in relation to these cases, "Oh, the times were unenlightened, and the jury made a mistake as the wisest of men may sometimes make a mistake." Unenlightened times! There were men in those days, out of each of whom, whether in poetry, philosophy, or statesmanship, half a dozen modern great men might have been carved. Legislation, indeed, was barbarous, and continued so. Fifty six years after the slaughter of the Perrys Judge Fowell of Exeter, Lord Chief Justice, and other little daughter Elizabeth, eleven years old, to die for withdrift, and die for it they did. As to the mistake—on that we found our argument—it is precisely because we may make a mistake that we would revolt at risking one which is irrevocable. Sir Fitzroy Kelly declared in the House of Commons that he found seventeen cases in the present century of accused men having been sentenced to death, though their innocence had been subsequently established and rendered as manifest as that of any man now living; of these, eight were hanged and one was within four hours of his execution when the pardon arrived. Sir Fitzroy Kelly has also alluded, in his evidence before the Royal Commission, to the case of a person of the name of Chalker, who had been capitally convicted for the murder of a gamekeeper; he was executed, and it turned out in a few years afterwards that the real murderer had appeared in India, and when dying had confessed his guilt."

"The man who was executed was wholly free from guilt; he was the wrong man."

"Sir Fitzroy Kelly details a case which is full of instruction. It is the case, says he, 'of a person who, within my own recollection, was tried, convicted, and sentenced to death, and would have been executed, had he not been reprieved. I think, on a Monday morning, but on the Sunday he was reprieved, and his life saved and he was very shortly afterwards pardoned, under these circumstances. Three men with others were drinking in a public house at night; two of them, the murdered man, and the man who was indicted for his murder, were quarrelled, and the murdered man threw a pint pot at the head of the other, who started up and swore that he would be the death of him; the murdered man ran out of the house and ran away pursued by the other, and followed (though it was not noticed at the time) by a third; he ran from the public-house in question a considerable distance through a field, and then, as he was returning to his cabin, he was shot by an old musket in the hands of one of the negroes. Hastily searching him they discovered that he had no money with the exception of a single three cent piece. Calling his body with leaves and underclothes, and interlarded at this disappointed man, the demon proceeded to the murdered man's house, intent on completing their work of death. At the door of the house they met Keenan's wife and in an insolent and threatening manner demanded something to eat."

"The woman replied that there was not much in the house, but that her husband would return in the course of a few minutes, and such as it was they could have a portion. One of the negroes then remarked that the need not wait for her husband—'No Count but Count'—that they had 'fixed him.' The woman became seriously alarmed at this stage of the proceedings, and feeling that she was in imminent danger, attempted to seize a pistol lying on the mantel-piece. She was rudely pushed aside by one of the fends, while the other, with a blow from an axe he carried, stretched her bleeding and half dead on the floor at their feet. . . . In attempting to arise, another blow was struck her on the trunk of her body, and she fell back a second time, her head in the fire blazing on the hearth. The oldest child, a boy some ten years of age, stepped into the house at this time, and seeing his mother's position, ran forward to extricate her from her apparently painful situation, when the axe was again raised and the boy sank beside his mother. The second child, a girl of some years younger than the boy, was sleeping in a bed, and being awakened by the noise, began to cry and call for his mother. 'To have treated it as they did the boy, would have been an act of mercy!' They set the bed on fire, and binding the child to it, buried her alive! These are the facts of the murder. They are too revolting to dwell on a single moment longer than that is positively necessary. The atrocious party secured the prisoners, and on the following day, the 20th, delivered them to the proper civil authorities at Omega Landing. Having confessed their guilt and waived an examination, Judge Noland committed them for trial and placed them in the hands of his constable, to be conveyed to the parish rest for imprisonment. The constable took them in charge and started on his journey, but had only gotten a short distance, when a crowd of negroes overtook him, demanding that the terrible possession of the murderers, and building a huge fire, deliberately burnt them at the stake! Both met their fate without protest or expostulation, and were apparently convinced that they fully merited the terrible death which they finally suffered, and that the burning was in progress, and thinking prevent a continuance of such horrible scenes, Gen. Peck and Capt. Cavalier rode up to the crowd and ordered them to desist, but the negroes refused to comply with the order, saying that the murderers should be burnt then and there."

the danger to which he was exposing himself, and, in great agitation, finding that he could not save the man, he ran away, and was caught in the way I have stated. The real murderer proved the matter not only by existing the case under circumstances which left no room for doubt, but he pointed out where a knife which he had hid would be found buried, and he also pointed out where a portion of the money of which he had robbed the murdered man could be found; and it was found there, and of course the innocent man was pardoned. I mention this case (and it is only one of some four or five which have come before me) to show that there are cases of circumstantial evidence may be made out, and that infinite and irrefragable probabilities may be made to arise, and yet the person charged with the offence may be innocent. I therefore say, that if a case like this happens only once in half a century, but still more if we find that such cases do occur from time to time, and again that there are cases of mistaken identity, and that there are other cases in which, with all the acuteness of attention, and the anxious care and caution which can be bestowed upon the subject, error cannot be avoided, and innocent men are in fact convicted, it appears to me to constitute a ground why, unless murders can be prevented in no other way, unless no other method of punishment will have any effect to deter, it is the duty of the Legislature to put an end to capital punishment."

A FAMILY MURDERED IN MISSISSIPPI—THE MURDERERS BURNED AT THE STAKE.

A brief account of the discovery of a murder perpetrated near Omega Landing, on the Mississippi river, has already been published. The following terrible details of the sequel are taken from the Vicksburg Times of April 22d: The citizens living in the vicinity of the scene, including Gen. William R. Peck, Capt. James W. Cavalier, and George P. Dewees, immediately telegraphed to this city requesting that Deputy Marshal Reor be sent to investigate the matter, and if possible bring the guilty parties to justice. The Deputy Marshal, who was in matters of this nature, Capt. Reor was probably the very best man in the community who could have been selected to perform the required duty, and we have the testimony of those gentlemen whose names we have just made use of, to the effect that he accomplished the work in a most summary and thorough manner. Taking the first boat he proceeded to Omega Landing, within a mile or two of the river, and there obtained information which convinced him that the criminals had crossed over into this State in a skiff, and were making their escape in an easterly direction."

Accompanied by Gen. Peck and Capt. Cavalier, Reor crossed into Mississippi, and by great energy and perseverance, succeeded in coming up with the fugitives on the second day. Four negroes are supposed to have been implicated in the murder. Two, who are yet at liberty, planned the murder, and the two who were burnt at the stake executed the heinous act. The two arrested were taken singly; the first one acknowledging his guilt at once, and informing on his accomplice. From the confession made by both soon after their arrest, it was ascertained that the murder was committed by the two who were burnt at the stake, and the two who were taken singly, and the two who were burnt at the stake executed the heinous act. Peck and Capt. Cavalier rode up to the crowd and ordered them to desist, but the negroes refused to comply with the order, saying that the murderers should be burnt then and there."

SIR WALTER SCOTT'S FIRST LOVE.

For some time after he had begun to associate exclusively with the members of the Club and the Speculative Society, Scott continued to be as careless, not to say slovenly in his attire, as he used to be when a school-boy and a writer's apprentice. All at once his habits changed in this respect, and he became a well-dressed young man—a squire, as his companions pronounced him. He had fallen in love with a young lady whom he had encountered at the church door, and conveyed to her own home, sheltered from the rain by his umbrella. His family and hers were not of equal rank, and he was not of equal fortune, but he was not deterred by these considerations. He was well received and made light of, and the acquaintance went on, more especially as young Scott made his way, as he soon afterwards did, into the set in which the young lady's brother was a member. Hence it came to pass that he met the young lady frequently, not in Edinburgh only, but in her own and other country houses, and that she, being addicted to poetry and romance, received him kindly and frankly as often as he came."

This sort of intimacy was kept up for years, throughout the whole interval, indeed, between 1782 and 1786; and Scott regarding it as he regard all things else, through the medium of his own imagination, he had been led to suppose that his passion was reciprocated. No word escaped him, however, to the lady herself, either in conversation or writing, indicative of the state of his own feelings. He resembled in this respect the most bashful of the bashful lovers described in his novels. He told his secret to many of his friends, and among others to Miss Cranston, daughter of the Earl of Finglisle, who was the object of his devotion. He said nothing. It is worthy of remark, however, that neither the passion itself, nor the secrecy with which it was guarded, exercised the slightest influence over his character. As first love is apt to do with such as him, it deepened in him the poetic temperament; but it made him neither less industrious nor less manly."

Thus far the tide of fortune may be said to have rolled with a steady current in Scott's favor. He was in fair practice at the bar, considering his age and standing. The advocates had appointed him one of their librarians. He was rapidly establishing a good name as a man of genius and great research. He was about to experience the first success of his pen. Encouraged in part by the success of his translation, in part by the partial assurances of his friend, Miss Cranston, he made up his mind to tell his tale of love, and finding himself under the same root with the object of his affections, he besought her to give him her heart, and was rejected. He had no heart to give. Another had it, and he was one of Walter's dearest friends. It would be ungenerous, if it were possible, to depict his feelings on that occasion. This much, however, we are bound to say, that he overmastered them with a power of will which is marvellous; and carving in his soul a grief which never died, he never allowed himself to stand for a day to stand between him and the manly exercise of his faculties. He quitted the house, made his way into Perthshire, and threw himself, with apparently increased zeal, into the researches which were to him at once business and recreation, while strange to say, only one short poem by his hand survives to tell that such an incident ever befell him. There is, however, no doubt that there are traces of her in the heroines of the "Lay," "Rokeby," and "Red-gamlet."—London Quarterly Review.

THE LAST OF A GREAT FAMILY. (Paris Correspondence of the Cour Journal.) The striking event of the week has been rather in harmony with its gloomy tenor, than with its joyous beginning—the death of the last descendant of the princely family of Condé, whose fate, foretold at the hour of her birth, has just been fulfilled according to prophecy, by the circumstances of her death. The Princess de Condé was of the highest blood of Savoy, great Seigneurs, holding the proudest feudal rights in France. Their power was proverbial. "No Count but Count" was a popular dictum in use among the people before the Revolution, to express the highest pretension to which pride and arrogance could attain. But pride, even when of such mighty structure as this, may have a fall, and the Condés, who gave such an immense number of high functionaries to every noble profession, have just been extinguished in the person of a poor, weak, old lady, aged and unpretending, who had been waiting for death without dismay for the last 20 years. The scene of prophecy, which she loved to tell, and which had prepared her for the loss of her goodly sons and beautiful daughters who had once crowded around her knee, is one of the most impressive among those recorded of the insolence of the great Seigneurs before the Revolution. The Princess de Condé, flushed with the hope and joy inspired by the prospect of an heir to his broad domains stood waiting at one of the windows of the feudal castle at Bolimier, to watch for the arrival of the official authorities who, in case of a birth connected with royalty, even to the twelfth degree, were summoned to testify that no fraud was practised and no substitution made. The Seignior stood in full dress, with the long rapier worn by men of high caste at the time. His ruffled hand was playing with the hilt, and the diamond of his finger flashed in the light. He had grown nervous and irritated with watching, and the snow which lay hard upon the ground blown upward now and then in showers of dry dust was almost blinding him as he strained his eyes toward the highway from the town. These circumstances considered, it certainly was unfortunate that a snow ball sent from a group of village lads at play on the green before the castle gate, should have flown askew and have hit such a potent Seignior right upon the nose. But fate loves to play such pranks sometimes, and the Seignior de Condé in furious mood, forgetting of the happy event about to occur, rushed into the road, drawing his shining blade, and shouting aloft, demanding in a terrible voice who had done the damage? "Tweedle!" said one of the boys, coming forward bold and brave, and truthful, to save his comrades from suspicion. The boy was remarkable for his beauty—the only son of a poor widow—the ruddy glow of health was on his cheek, and his eyes were sparkling with youthful fire. This, as expected, at the more the fierce rage of the Seignior de Condé. Without a word, he made a rush at the poor helpless child, and plunged his rapier into his bosom to the very hilt, and when he drew it out he wiped it on the hard snow, leaving crimson stains which had not disappeared when the sun went down!

The horror expressed among the boy's companions can be well imagined. But the fierce shrieks of his mother rose above the groans of pity from his comrades. She rushed upon the cruel Seignior and would have torn him to pieces had not the murderers escorting the authorities from the town, just then rode up and rescued him, all pale and agitated, from her grasp. A cry of anguish, almost as deep as that of the bereaved mother, soon rang through the chamber into which the authorities had been ushered. No heir to Condé had appeared, but in his stead a weak, pining girl, whose entrance into the world had cost her mother's life, was announced by the heralds of the Condés. The prophecy is considered a great curiosity, as it is registered from the lips of the bereaved mother, and the concluding phrase, written by the schoolmaster of Poucin, is remarkable: "And after uttering these words she never spoke again." The girl born on this eventful day, grew up and was married into her own people to the Lord of Baviere; a large family was born to her, but not one now remains, and M. de Baviere lies buried at Montparnasse, with no other epitaph than this—"Il n'y aura plus jamais Condé."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
(Ex. Army Med. Staff)
CHLORODYNE
IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

CARTON.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Woodward, in the case of DR. COLLIS BROWNE, was automatically the inventor of CHLORODYNE; that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, being the inventor was deliberately untrue, which he regretted had been sworn to. Eminent medical authorities of London stated that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the discoverer of Chlorodyne; that they regretted it largely, and more so, as they had sworn to the contrary. See Times, July 12, 1864.

The Public, therefore, are cautioned against using any other than
DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S
Chlorodyne.

REMARKS ON USE AND ACTION.
This invaluable remedy produces quiet, refreshing sleep, relieves pain, calms the system, restores the deranged functions and stimulates healthy action of the secretions of the body, without creating any of those unpleasant results attending the use of opium.
Old and young may take it at all hours and in times when required. Thousands of persons testify to the marvellous good effects and wonderful cures, while Medical men extol its virtues most extensively, using
it in great quantities in the following diseases:
Diseases in which it is found eminently useful—
Cholera, Dysentery, Diarrhoea, Colds, Coughs,
Asthma, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Whooping Cough,
Cramp, Hysteria, &c.

RETRACTS FROM MEDICAL OPINIONS.
The Right Hon. Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians and J. T. Davenport that he had received information to the effect that the only remedy of any service in Cholera was Chlorodyne.
—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

From A. Montgomery, Esq., his Inspector of Hospitals, Bombay: "Chlorodyne is a most valuable remedy in Neuralgia, Asthma, and Dysentery.
To it I fully owe my restoration to health, after 18
months' severe suffering, and when other remedies
had failed."

Dr. Lowe, Medical Missionary in India, reports
(Dec. 1865) that in nearly every case of Cholera in which Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne was administered, the patient recovered.

Mrs. Forbes, wife of the Chaplain at Paris:—"I cannot speak too highly of Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne; I have not in any single instance been disappointed with the result, even in aggravated cases of Indian Cholera."

Extract from the General Board of Health, London, as to its efficacy in Cholera:—"So strongly are
we convinced of the immense value of this remedy,
that we cannot too forcibly urge the necessity of supplying it in all cases."

Beware of spurious and dangerous compounds sold as CHLORODYNE, from which frequent fatal results have followed.
